

Abstract

An automobile door comprises an outer module having a car body shell and forms an outer design surface of said automobile door, in addition to a unit carrier that is 5 arranged on the side of the outer module facing the interior of the motor vehicle and that is connected to said outer module forming an interface. A sealing extends along the interface between the unit carrier and the outer module, said sealing covering the interface at least partly.